UK Outlook for Sunday 2 May 2021 to Tuesday 11 May 2021:
Showery conditions with temperatures well below average continuing into the start of this period. Each day, showers will develop fairly widely but most areas will also see some decent sunny spells. Nights will continue to be cold with some overnight frosts. Showers are likely to continue to fall as snow over high ground in the north. Into next week, a gradual transition to more unsettled conditions is likely though the timing and details of this transition is uncertain. This brings an increased likelihood of spells of more persistent rain and stronger winds at times. Temperatures are likely to remain below average overall though there are signs that they could recover back closer to average with a reduction in the extent of overnight frosts.
